

OHATS Items Reported by Gena Schoen for the T/MC

Event date: 8/2/00

What happened: Provided "consulting" to Traci S. from Christopher House on starting a mentoring program. I provided some basic questions to answer, such what age group do they want to serve and what is the purpose of the program, then discussed the questions in more detail.

Why this is important: This was important to our organization because this was the first time I provided such a service in my role as T/MC Outreach. It was also the first time I used the questionnaire I had previously developed to help people think through the process of starting a program.

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcomes is that Christopher House may launch a mentoring program. Real outcome is that I got to test my "How to start a program" questionnaire

What happened: Rebecca A. from the Jewish United Fund's TOV Literacy project e-mailed us on our website for more information on our organization. In response to this e-mail, I contacted her and shared information about our conference and volunteer recruitment campaign. I also learned about their program, which is focused on literacy tutoring in schools.

Why this is important: It is a new contact and potentially another organization to get involved in our programs.

Actual/potential outcome: Initiated contact and provided information on the T/MC.
We learned about another program. Information is now in our library.

What happened: Spoke with Jeannie B. from East Village Youth Program and learned that they launched a new outreach effort last year. East Village Youth Program is going into schools and conducting workshops to help better prepare youth to get into college. They decided to add the outreach effort as a way to reach more students without the cost of having to fully enroll them in their program (all students enrolled in East Village are guaranteed a college scholarship).

Why this is important: It is important to stay informed on what others are doing so that we can refer volunteers and direct other resources that may be a good fit.

Actual/potential outcome: The real outcome is staying informed

What happened: Provided "consulting" service to Adriene C. from the Westside Holistic Center on starting a tutoring/mentoring program. They planned to start an after school program that enhances academic skills and social skills beginning in October 2000.

Why this is important: It was important because we learned of another t/m program that will serve youth and it gave us the opportunity to share our knowledge with others.

Actual/potential outcome: The potential outcome is that the information we shared may help make the program stronger. (They already had program ideas in place and used our services more to discuss specifics).

What happened: Spoke with Sheila H. from Denver, CO who contacted us about the November conference. She had spoken to Dan previously. She shared how impressed she is with the T/MC and that she thinks we are a great model to use in other cities, such as Denver.

Why this is important: This conversation was important because it reinforced the value of the T/MC and demonstrated that others view our work as important and worth duplicating.

Actual/potential outcome: The potential outcomes is that Sheila spreads the word about the T/MC and starts something similar in Denver or gets others to buy into the concept and start it.

What happened: Represented the T/MC in the LAN 65 resource fair at Truman College

Why this is important: It gave us an opportunity to provide information from our directory to more families, plus the opportunity to network with other service providers. In addition, we recruited a speaker for our November conference to discuss wraparound services. A representative from LAN 65 also registered for a display table at our conference.

Actual/potential outcome: The real outcome is that we provided information on tutoring/mentoring programs on the North Side and Central City. Also, we recruited a speaker and display table for our conference

What happened: Provided "consulting" to Jessica H. from Project Explore. They currently work with youth in the summer to teach them about dinosaur exploration. They wanted to add an ongoing tutoring/mentoring component to help the youth year-round.

Why this is important: It was important because it allowed us to share our knowledge, plus it introduced us to another program. Information on Project Explore is in our library.

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcomes is that Project Explore starts a year-round t/m program.

What happened: Christine Feldman contacted us to request a directory. She works for DCFS. I asked her if she wanted to order multiple copies for others in her office. She began asking questions about the T/MC. I gave her a brief overview and offered to come meet with her to discuss our services plus learn more about what she does. Also I want to discuss how the T/MC and DCFS can find a way to work together in a more systematic fashion.

Why this is important: Because we have been working with DCFS in a number of different ways for the last seven years and itg would be wonderful if we could do this more systematically. Also, DCFS would benefit greatly from our services.

Actual/potential outcome: I have scheduled a meeting for 10/17/00 with Christine Feldman. In addition, I sent her an order form for the directory to share with others she's meeting with 10/11/00 and I sent her a copy of the directory.

What happened: I contacted The Great Books Foundation for a raffle donation for the 14th T/MC Conference scheduled for November 9 & 10, 2000. The initial conversation for a donation led into a more in-depth conversation in which we shared information about our organizations. There is a lot of potential for t/m programs to partner with TGBF.

Why this is important: This conversation planted a seed for future partnerships and expanding the work of The Great Book Foundations into tutor/mentor programs.

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcomes include a donation of books and training for our raffle; The Great Books Foundation setting up a table at our conference; and The Great Books Foundation getting involved with t/m programs

What happened: Vikki R. from the National Mentoring Center contacted us to learn more about our conferences, in particular, our conference scheduled for this April/May. They planned to host a regional conference in the Chicago area in April. I provided information about the format/topics of our conference and invited her organization to partner with us. She is going to discuss options with her staff, such as hosting it elsewhere or working with us. She said they could provide a workshop presenter for us at no charge. Possible someone to discuss board development.

Why this is important: This was important because it was a step toward building a stronger relationship with the National Mentoring Center. Dan has spoken at their conference in Portland and has tried to build a relationship in the past.

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcomes is that the National Mentoring Center partners with us for the conference or at a minimum provides a workshop presenter. Longer-term potential outcomes include developing a partnership of some sort.

What happened: Provided consulting services to T. Stanley from Christopher House. This is the second time we spoke on the telephone about the mentoring program she is developing. The first time (documented earlier) was general "How to Get Started". This conversation was specific to volunteer reporting on their activities/volunteer support and volunteer screening.

Why this is important: It is important because part of role is to help others start and operate quality programs.

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcomes is a stronger program

What happened: Contacted Sue T. with the Christ Evangelical Lutheran Church Brain Booster program as part of my outreach efforts. She gave me a better understanding of the their program. They work with 30 kids (that's capacity) and have about 25 tutors. 20 of the tutors are high school students earning their community service hours. The program runs from 3:00-5:00 on Tuesdays. They spend 1/2 hour in groups working on basic math and reading skills, than 1 hour with their tutors. The adult tutors also serve as mentors to the high school students, so there is a need for more adult volunteers

Why this is important: Important because it's part of our outreach efforts and we learned more about a program and their needs.

Actual/potential outcome: Building a stronger relationship and stronger programs

What happened: Spoke with Becky N. from Park KIDS/Chase Park program as part of outreach efforts. Learned more about the PARK Kids programs. Each park determines their own programming. Chase offers several different recreational classes youth can choose including theater & arts, gymnastics and woodworking. Homework time is also a choice. Students work independently. The park use to offer tutoring, but the funding was provided by CPS who now uses that money to fund the Lighthouse programs at schools.

Why this is important: Outreach. Gained a better understanding about the PARK Kids program, while also sharing info on us.

Actual/potential outcome: I told Becky that if they want to get more into designing a t/m program with volunteers, the T/MC could help.

What happened: Spoke with Lillian E. from Presentation Church - A.S.A.P. t/m program as part of my outreach efforts. Learned more about their program which serves 67 youth M-F afterschool. Needs include more volunteers, computers and money for summer field trips.

Why this is important: Making contact with more programs. Helping get them aware of what we do.

Actual/potential outcome: Making contact

What happened: Contacted STEP, Inc. Youth Service Program as part of our outreach efforts. Learned more about their program and their needs. One of their biggest needs is finding volunteers to teach their students computer graphic design. In general, they mainly utilize parent volunteers. The staff works with the students. They serve about 85 annually, and average about 25 youth a day.

Why this is important: It expanded our relationship with another program and spread the word about the T/MC

Actual/potential outcome: I faxed Pamela D. information about a new program from Chicago Cares that helps organizations find technology volunteers. Maybe this will lead to STEP getting some volunteers to help students with computer graphic design.

What happened: Contacted the Arab American Action Network Youth Program as part of our Outreach efforts. Learned about their program, which currently is using high school students to tutor younger kids. Needs include trying to recruit adult/college students as tutors. The program manager, Hatem A., has tried recruiting with not a lot of success. Challenges could be the time of the program, which is 4:30. We discussed the value in using high school students, but the need exists to better train them and to educate the parents on the value of using high school students.

Why this is important: It introduced us to another program and us to them.

Actual/potential outcome: I will meet with Hatem A. to discuss more in-depth about ways to structure the program. For example, should the focus continue as cross-age tutoring, or should it keep trying to recruit adults. Also, I will help him develop some more training for the high school student tutors.

What happened: Contacted Cetnro Comunitario Juan Diego as part of our outreach effort. Learned about their program which includes tutoring for kids and teaching computers to kids. There are currently about 35 kid enrolled, and 6 more on the waiting list. There's a need for adult volunteers, especially those that can work with kids with special needs. We discussed some recruitment ideas and the importance of training as part of the retention plan.

Why this is important: It introduced us to another organization and us the them.

Actual/potential outcome: We are scheduled to talk again on 1/2/01 about volunteer recruitment and training. Potentially, this conversation, and others that follow, could lead to the organization getting and keeping valuable volunteers, which of course would better serve the kids.

What happened: Contacted Sunlight African Community Center as part of our outreach work. Learned more about the program and some of their challenges. Two of the top challenges are need for more funds and need for volunteers. We talked about using the high school students as volunteers because they need community service hours. Lack of parent involvement is another challenge. The program's founder has done a lot of networking with local organizations, especially other organizations that target immigrants.

Why this is important: Part of our outreach goals.

Actual/potential outcome: Ruphina, the founder and Executive Director, told me about two other organizations, Starfish and Haitian Human Services. I shared some ideas with her, including telling her about the high school community service requirement. This may lead to more volunteers for her program.

What happened: Matt T. from JACS contacted us looking for Steve R. to get guidance on evaluation. Matt saw Steve's name in our newsletter as the evaluation contact. I referred Matt to this website and said he could contact Steve via e-mail. We began talking about JACS program and how they are modifying it from telephone contact with many (1,000s??) Job Corps graduates to providing more extensive support to fewer students in two states. We talked a little about structuring a one-on-one relationship with a volunteer mentor and the need for JACS staff to support the mentors. I referred him to Tim H. from Mercy Home for an idea of how many mentors one staff person could support. Matt asked if we could talk in the future about training and supporting mentors. I, of course, said "Yes!"

Why this is important: This event was important for a variety of reasons, including it expanded the conversation to another organization, in turn showing the potential value of this website. It also shows that someone is reading the newsletter. It also expanded our relationship with another program.

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcomes include another organization entering information on this site and more involvement in our other events (e.g. Volunteer Recruitment Campaign, Conference)

What happened: Linda B. from Emerald Avenue Church of God called for Dan Bassill on Friday. She wanted help on training mentors for a program she's starting at her church. I talked with her because Dan was not in. Through our conversation I learned that she first needed some guidance on how to structure her program, which is necessary before she could train volunteers. I sent her How To Get started information and told her to contact me again to after putting some ideas on paper. She also still wanted to talk with Dan. I left him a message.

Why this is important: This was important because it fulfills our outreach mission.

Actual/potential outcome: Real outcomes is that through our conversation, Linda began thinking about what she needs to do before launching her program. Potential outcomes is a stronger program from the start because of the planning that went into it.

What happened: Follow-up call to Tricia S. with Centro Comunitario Juan Diego. Initial contact made as part of outreach effort. This conversation we discussed some of Tricia's areas of concern which include needing more volunteers, getting parents more involved and having more program structure. We talked informally and some suggestions I made include having older kids serve as tutors for younger kids and having parent committee take on the responsibility of getting more parents involved and possibly organize workshops for parents that help them understand ways to get more involved in their children's educations. We will talk again in a few weeks, after Tricia has time to go through information I sent her on starting a program.

Why this is important: This was important because the conversation is helping strengthen another program, which is part of our goals

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcome is that Juan Diego develops a cross-age tutoring program and gets parents more involved in their children's education by educating them on how to do that

What happened: Contacted Association House as part of our outreach efforts. Learned more about their after-school programs which consists of one for kids ages 6-12 and other for teens, ages 12-18.

Why this is important: It was part of our outreach efforts and further informed one of the program directors about the services of the T/MC

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcomes include attending our conference or participating in our volunteer recruitment campaign.

What happened: Contacted Rockwell-Grant Youth Project as part of our outreach efforts. Rockwell-Grant is listed in our directory. Learned that they are looking at some changes to the program, primarily focusing its services more on youth as opposed to the entire family, as before. This will allow them to serve more youth. Also, because of violence in Rockwell Gardens, it makes outreach into the community difficult and dangerous. The program is primarily in-school and there's a need for day time mentors & tutors.

Why this is important: It was part of our outreach efforts. In addition, I provided Sandra R. with some suggestions for recruiting day time volunteers and other agencies to potentially partner with including Scholarship and Guidance

Actual/potential outcome: Potentially Rockwell-Grant may develop new partnerships because of our suggested leads and they may find more volunteers for their programs.

What happened: Contacted the Donnelly Chicago Youth Center about their CHESS program which is listed in our directory. Learned that the CHESS program is no longer operating because the kids who were in it graduated from high school (CHESS was like an I Have A Dream Program with a specific group of kids). CYC has limited peer mentoring and some tutoring. Wants to expand these services at some point. Needs more tutors, especially adult volunteers.

Why this is important: Learned that a program we had in our directory needed to be modified, in turn, allowing us to provide the public with more accurate information. Informed another person about the services of T/MC

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcomes is that the Donnelly CYC will take more advantage of our services. A real outcome is more accurate information in our database.

What happened: Contacted Onward Neighborhood House as part of our outreach efforts. Learned that they are collaborating with East Village and that 7-8 of their students to East Village for tutoring. Onward is also part of a collaboration with Erie and Association Houses and other agencies for Youth Options Unlimited. In addition, learned that Onward received a grant from Kraft to start a career-related mentoring program. I provided some ideas of how to implement this. I also suggested to try to incorporate it into what they are already doing, as opposed to creating something new and separate. I also suggested they contact some of their current collaboration partners for ideas, including Erie Neighborhood House who had been offering a career mentoring program in the past, I believe. In addition, I sent some how to start a program information.

Why this is important: Provided ideas that may help the group implement a mentoring program. Also, learned of collaborations.

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcomes include Onward developing a strong mentoring program. Another potential outcome is another conference participant or committee member for the volunteer recruitment campaign

What happened: Cabrini Connections provided space in the Cornerstone building for New Concepts to hold a volunteer training session. About 10 New Concepts' volunteers attended the session.

Why this is important: This was important to our organization because we shared our resources to help another program.

Actual/potential outcome: Potential outcomes include more quality tutoring/mentoring in Chicago because New Concepts had a place to train its volunteers. Without access to training space, New Concepts would be challenged in offering training.
